CITRUS EXCHANGE NOTES

It is a fact, incongruous and inconsistent as it may appear, that from the Caloosahatchee to Palatka, the Florida people-citrus growers included, are eating apples from the north and bananas from everywhere, while they are shipping green oranges and grapefruit to various markets. It's fit to sell but not to eat.

Manager Gillett makes, it perfectly plain in all his public addresses, that the Florida Citrus Exchange is merely the selling end of the State organization, and does not seek to interfere with the conduct of local associations. Advice of the very best is on tap at all hours, but the growers themselves are to decide what they will do and how they will do it-but they also understand that each association, each grove is on its own basis and the returns will tell unerringly where either has failed to live up to the standard recommended.

Buyers and shippers are few and far between in the groves today. The all cash buyer has got his fill-at present prices and even small advances are not readily forthcoming. He does not agree to take the fruit from the tree before January so the owner is carrying his own insurance against frost and quite a chance from early indications.

When the Exchange packing-houses have contracted all they desire to handle this season-which will be within a few days-the buyers will begin their low offering again. Then it will be a case of "take what I offer or consign your fruit." The growers know this and are signing up large amounts daily.

Sales Manager Burton has orders for more carloads on his desk today from Texas and Oklahoma than was marketed all last season in that territory. Is the Exchange popular with the trade? Looks like it don't it?

While green oranges and grapefruit are a drug on the markets north at constantly declining prices, orders for shipment "at the market price" are piling up in the sales department when it is mature, ripe and full flavored. No other kind wanted. Is not this a sufficient argument against green ship-

Eighty-four local associations already enrolled will pack an average of 40,000 boxes or more each this season. This is equivalent to 3,360,000 boxes, considerably more than half the crop. That the Exchange will dominate the market for that class of fruits which brings the highest prices in an assured
